

Making way for cars

Through traffic was barred from a section of Egmont St. New Plymouth, today, when A. J. Cowley Ltd demolished the city council's former gas showrooms at the intersection with Ariki St. The council plans to develop the site for 25 metered car parking spaces. Mayor, Mr B. V. Sutherland said the council would try and have the parking developed as soon as possible, although it might not be ready for Christmas.

Watch out dogs — don't hang loose

A full-time dog ranger should be on duty in the New Plymouth area early next month. He will patrol beaches in the summer and the urban area all year round.

Mr J. S. Putt, secretary of the New Plymouth City and Taranaki County Councils' joint hydatids committee, said today about ten applications conditions and Mr Hotter appealed to them to consider the latter instead of "just buying a pet for Christmas."

Most dogs impounded were "forgotten" by people who went on their holidays. At this time of the year the situation got worse, he said.

Mr Hotter said four more kennels should be built at the pound. "If tougher bylaws on wandering dogs come, we'll never fit them into the present into wastelands of filth — dangerous filth.

Dog excrement carries a parasite which can enter the human blood stream and attack the liver, lung, brain or eye of its victim, says Miss Lee.

Young children are particularly vulnerable.

"I don't hate dogs — I love dogs. I hate irresponsible dog owners," she said.

Miss Lee's targets are by no

our priorities." She gives as an example a society which clothes its toddlers in mink coats while slum-dwellers die of starvation.

Miss Lee, at the age of 66, has the dynamism and vivacity of a woman half her age.

In a televised attack on the advice given by the medical profession concerning food-stuffs, Miss Lee ran up against a wily opponent.

Wives to join protest

MASTERTON, Today (NZPA). — A mass protest meeting by freezing workers and their wives over the employers' refusal to pay travelling allowances will be held at the Masterton War Memorial Stadium on Monday.

Yesterday, dismissal notices were handed out to seasonal workers at a
